A wrinkled face, warm heart, and a figure that shows she stopped counting calories years ago belong to a Grandmother.

A Grandmother is a woman whose ever-present love is generated in many ways. Her young grandchild sees her love in the jar always filled with cookies, while her own child sees her love in his mother's presence whenever sickness bids her there.

Not one, but two, generations of experience are accredited to a Grandmother. What has made her hair gray and her face worn? It could have been her child's wedding day, or the day her first grandchild was born, or even the week she was elected to be Counselor at a camp for children.

Nevertheless, she has managed to keep her position and her love of life throughout these trials.

She is Beauty, knitting by the fireside, Love, making her favorite batch of candy, and Humor, trying to jump rope with her grandchildren.

Her youth still emerges every now and then when she is asked to lead the Girl Scouts in a field trip or play umpire for the neighborhood baseball team.

Although a Grandmother ages outwardly, inside, her heart and spirit are so young as the child holding out his arms to say -- "Hi, Grandma."

My Granddaughter received an "A" on this paper, and the teacher wrote at the bottom "This is delightful."
